ENHR

European Network for Housing Research

One of the largest multi-disciplinary research networks
in Europe

Organisation of ENHR

The European Network for Housing Research (ENHR) was established in 1988 to provide an organisational platform for institutions and individuals, who are actively engaged in housing research. It has about 1000 individual and nearly 100 institutional members representing almost every country in Europe.

Although ENHR is an European network, researchers from outside Europe are also very welcome to join.

Benefits to members

By participating in the activities of ENHR, members can

- come in contact with the latest ideas and findings within European housing research,
- get first-hand knowledge of different housing solutions within Europe,
- work with other social scientists to produce new research,
- take the initiative to start new working groups or inter-European projects,
- present findings at stimulating and well organised research conferences in major European cities,
- come in contact with publishers and others who are interested in disseminating new research findings,
- announce their news in the quarterly ENHR Newsletter,
- have access to a list of ENHR members and their expertise.
